Full instructions

There are probably lots of things that contribute to how 'good' a sentence sounds. These factors include how easy it is to process, whether it makes sense, and whether or not it's grammatical.

In this study, we're looking at grammar specifically and how that relates to overall acceptability.

There will be two blocks of questions. One will ask you to rate how acceptable a sentence is, and the other will ask you to indicate if a sentence is grammatical or not.

A sentence is grammatical if it 'follows the rules' for constructing an English sentence. A sentence doesn't have to be a good sentence, or even make any sense at all to be grammatical. The most famous example of this is the sentence 'colorless green ideas sleep furiously'. Even though this sentence doesn't make sense, it 'follows the rules' for constructing an English sentence. English speakers mostly agree that 'colorless green ideas sleep furiously' is grammatical while 'green furiously ideas colorless sleep' is not.

In the grammar block, please use the buttons on the screen to say how confident you are that the sentence is grammatical or ungrammatical. Please label all sentences with a grammatical error as ungrammatical, even if the error is small, and label all sentences with no errors as grammatical, even if they are badly written or unclear.

In contrast, acceptability is a broader concept that is more about how natural a sentence sounds.

Among all grammatical sentences, some will be highly acceptable and 'sound good' while others will be not very acceptable and 'sound bad', even though they're all grammatical. Similarly, although ungrammatical sentences tend to 'sound bad', some are worse than others.

In the acceptability block, please rate each sentence on the acceptability scale provided. Sentences that sound natural should get higher ratings, sentences that sound bad should get lower ratings.
